

One Way to Minimize Trouble-free Trips to the Lake

When do you bring your boat to a marine dealership? If you are like most people, the answer is when it breaks.

Instead of a nice relaxing day at the lake, your boat is broken, you are agitated, and you have lost recreational time, which we have very little. Now, the question to ask is: when should I have brought my boat in to prevent a day like this? The best answer is before boating season starts. You should bring your boat in to a dealership, let a certified technician do general service, and look for any potential problems that could spoil a pleasant day on the lake for you, your family, and friends. This is normally a small expense that in many cases can prevent a larger expense.

So the next time you think my boat is fine, I have very few hours on it, I don't need to have it checked out, stop and think about sitting on the boat ramp with a motor that will not crank or being towed back in because your motor runs hot.

While all problems cannot be prevented, many can be by having annual general service.
